

A dream come true

New Democrats overjoyed by local, provincial returns

It was a dream come true Thursday night for the local New Democrats when they saw their candidate sweep Victoria-Haliburton and become a part of the first NDP government in this province's history.

Drunk with joy, NDP supporters danced to the hoots and hollers of others as poll after poll revealed the inevitable and overwhelming win by their candidate, Dennis Drainville.

And as if Drainville's victory wasn't enough to buoy the spirits of the crowd at the Lindsay Legion hall, the province-wide results were intoxicating.

Drainville's support surpassed all expectations. With 15,219 votes, the candidate outdistanced his nearest contender by more than 6,000 votes. He will be among the 77 members in Bob Rae's new NDP government.

Locally, Conservative candidate

Ron Jenkins placed second with 8,890 votes while Liberal candidate Pat O'Reilly was third with 7,604 votes.

"This is history in the making," said long-time NDP worker Linda McLaughlin. "And we're a part of it."

McLaughlin, who has been with the party for 20 years, is among the few who have braved many lean years for the NDP in this riding.

Cathy Vainio and Ivan Moore, past standard bearers for the party, were equally elated by the results.

"On the campaign, people were saying they were impressed with Dennis," said Vainio. "But this is beyond our dreams."

Even Drainville was surprised at the magnitude of his victory. Suppressing his excitement, the candidate calmly

Drainville victory puts expansion on front burner

Plans for the Haliburton Hospital expansion project can be retrieved from the moth balls.

Ontario's new government intends to build the 18-bed chronic care addition, victorious NDP candidate Dennis Drainville told The Times Thursday.

"As far as we're concerned it's a fait accompli," Drainville said in the wake of the election that saw him and his party swept to a history-making victory.

Drainville and NDP leader Bob Rae had promised during the campaign that the expansion would proceed if they were elected. And on Thursday, voters in this riding and across the province made that happen.

There is a need for chronic care beds in Haliburton County, Drainville said. "The need is obvious and urgent."

The project was killed by the Liberal government in favour of a new study into the long-term health care needs of this county. That study is not yet complete.

Drainville says the hospital expansion should have no bearing on the status of this study. He said the study is worthwhile and may identify other weaknesses in the local health care system.

Flood plain zoning means tax reduction for owners

In what could prove to have major implications for property owners along the Gull River, the Ministry of Revenue has agreed to reductions in assessments for a number of properties because of their location on the flood plain.

The reductions were agreed to Tuesday at a hearing held in the County Council Chambers. The hearings were called after the property owners were granted a reduction in their property taxes and the provincial ministry appealed that decision.

The appeals were led by Gord Monk, owner of the Gordon A. Monk Funeral Home. His appeal also included the property taxes paid on his residence, which stands next to his business.

Mr. Monk, who was represented by lawyer Robin Scott, told the hearing that following the passing of the municipal by-law defining the flood plain, he would have problems obtaining bank financing for the expansion of his business. "I spoke to a local bank manager," Monk told the hearing. "He advised me that once the flood plain was in place, CMHC (Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation) guideline would be followed."

It was explained that all federal and provincial agencies had been instructed not to support development in an area designated as a flood plain. Since his buildings fell within the designated area, he would be unable to expand his business using funding from such traditional sources as chartered banks, the Federal Business Development Bank, and other institutions covered by federal or provincial regulations.

Monk noted that the recently completed expansion to the funeral home was applied for prior to the introduction of the flood plain zoning. He said he had been warned about the implications of the new zoning and had applied for permission to expand his business before the law was enacted. The businessman pointed out that now that the zoning is in place, it will be very difficult to obtain funding for expansion and will adversely affect the price of his property and business if he attempted to sell it.

The hearing was also told the funeral home is also affected by another provincial

Strong voter turnout ensures NDP victory

Voters in Victoria-Haliburton were anything but apathetic Thursday.

According to preliminary figures from the returning office in Lindsay, 67 per cent of the eligible voters made it out to the polls.

Unofficial statistics show that 34,486 ballots were counted. This does not include spoiled ballots or protest votes.

The number of eligible voters was estimated to be around 51,500. (An official count was to be taken Saturday.)

The preliminary results showed NDP candidate Dennis Drainville with 44 per cent of the popular vote. Progressive Conservative candidate Ron Jenkins was second with 26 per cent, and Liberal candidate Pat O'Reilly was third with 22 per cent.

Among the fringe candidates, Brad Medd (Family Coalition) received the strongest support. Medd earned 1,410 votes or 4.1 per cent.

Independent candidate Hugh Boyd received 949 votes to get 2.8 per cent of the popular vote.

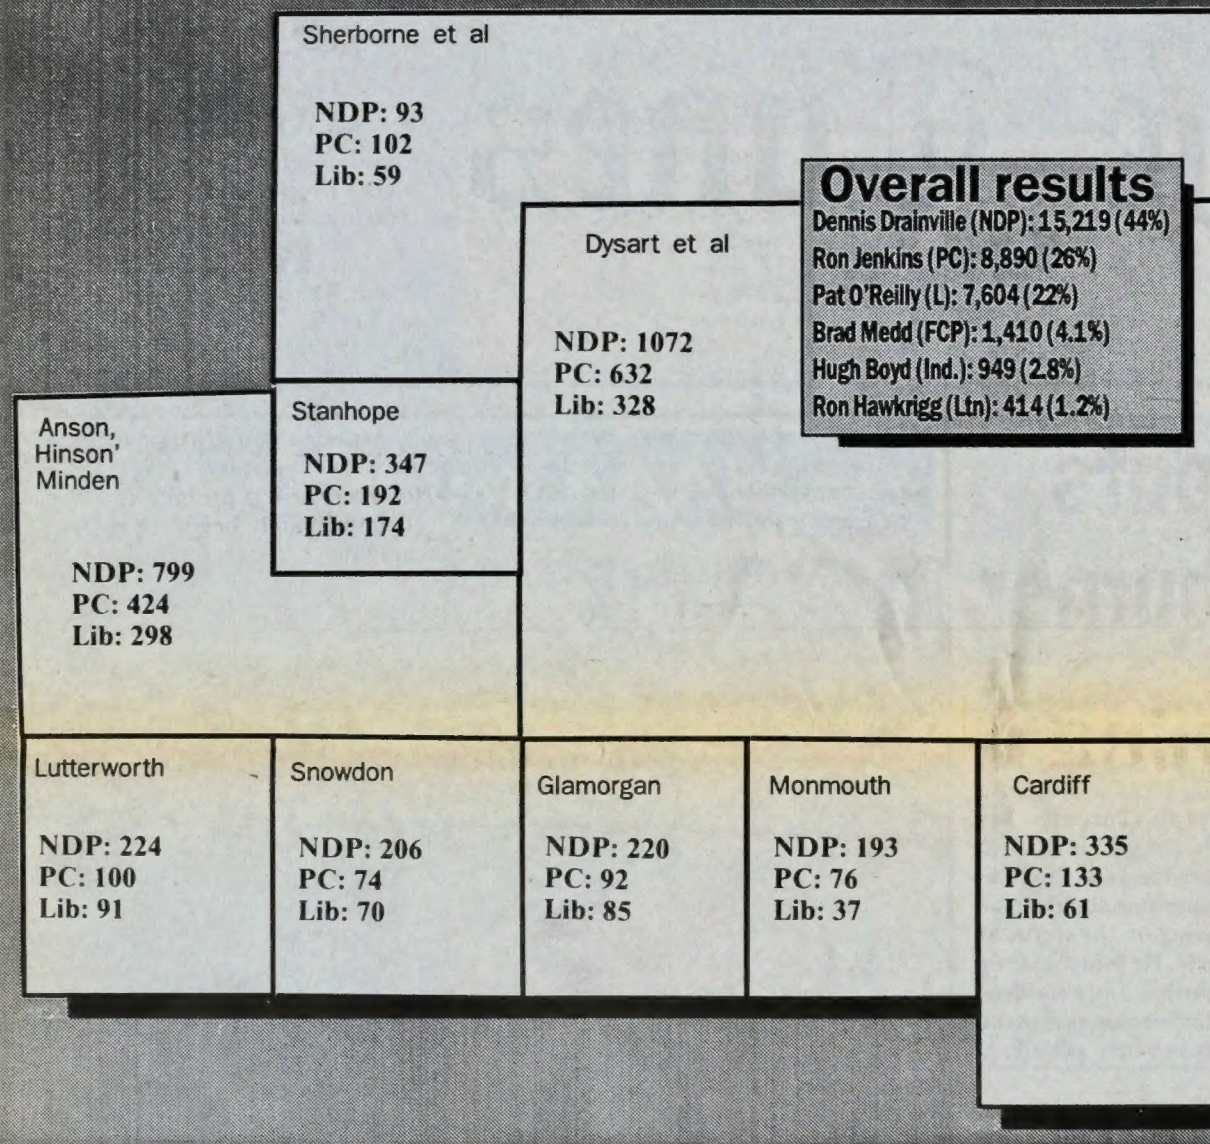

Libertarian candidate Ron Hawkrigg trailed the field with 414 votes for 1.2 per cent.

Drainville's support from Haliburton County voters was particularly solid. Fifty four per cent of the voters in this part of the riding supported the NDP candidate, giving him almost 3,500 votes.

Jenkins also had a good showing with 28 per cent of the Haliburton vote.

The Liberal popularity in this part of the riding dropped to just 18.5 per cent.

Enumerators miss their calls

Exercising the right to vote proved to be a painstaking task for a group of Sawyers Lake residents who were overlooked by the enumerators.

Primrose Birrell said she had to go to drive all the way to Lindsay last Wednesday and stand in line register to vote. She went through this so that she and about 12 of her neighbours could vote in Thursday's provincial election.

All this effort, she contends, was to correct an oversight of the enumerators.

Because of the oversight, Birrell and her neighbours were not on the list of eligible voters. When the Sawyers Lake residents realized this, they called the enumerator, who told them they could still vote if they showed up with identification on election day.

A phone call to the Chief Electoral Office in Toronto revealed that this information was not complete. A registered voter from that polling station would also have to vouch for them, Birrell was told.

Since the entire neighbourhood was missed, the residents were at a loss. Someone would have to go down to the returning office in Lindsay and register. That person could then vouch for the rest of the neighbours.

As it turned out, Birrell made the trip to Lindsay and she says she helped about 12 others to vote.

The Sawyers Lake residents weren't the only Haliburton County residents to be missed by the enumerators. A section of Horseshoe Lake Road was also overlooked. Birrell said she was told there were about 900 homes in this riding that were missed by enumerators.

Although she managed to have her voting rights restored, Birrell says she now wants to make sure the enumeration process is improved before the next election. She is planning to write to the Chief Electoral Office in Toronto to make sure they are aware of what happened here.

"I don't think it's right that people should be disenfranchised," she said.

Hilda Geary, another Sawyers Lake resident, agrees. She said there are thousands of people across the province who were failed by the enumeration process.

Geary said she called the returning office about a week before the election and was told an enumerator would soon be around. She said she waited at home for two days, but no one showed up.

"It's an absolute crime," said Geary. "I like to vote and I don't like it to be taken away."

Liberals will rebuild after dismal loss

There were few smiling faces among those at the Admiral Inn Thursday night as the local election results revealed dismal support for Liberal candidate Pat O'Reilly.

The banquet hall was decked out for a celebration, but no one was in the mood after watching their rookie candidate slip to third place in the polls.

O'Reilly collected 7,604 votes accepting the first defeat in 15 years in this riding for the Liberals. Progressive Conservative candidate Ron Jenkins finished in second with 8,890 votes while New Democrat Dennis Drainville scored an incredible victory with 15,219 votes.

Drainville's support was strong throughout the riding. He won in virtually every region of Victoria-Haliburton, surpassing even his own expectations.

"It's a swing vote," said O'Reilly, noting the stunning NDP victories around the province. "People in their wildest dreams wouldn't have predicted this."

The picture was clear less than a half hour after the polls closed. Drainville was on his way to an impressive victory, while O'Reilly was destined to finish a distant third.

In spite of the large crowd and festive surroundings, the banquet hall was very quiet. Keeping his distance from the press, O'Reilly was surrounded by his campaign workers who engaged in whispered conversation.

By 8:45, local Liberals turned their attention away from the scoreboard at the front of the hall. They clustered around the television sets to watch the province-wide results in silent astonishment.

The upset Liberal defeat in Victoria-Haliburton was being repeated in riding after riding across Ontario. All told, the New Democrats won 77 seats, earning the opportunity to govern this province.

"I'm surprised," O'Reilly admitted later. "I didn't expect this." He said his personal defeat is a reflection of the provincial trend.

"It's certainly a message . . . loud and clear, they want a change," he said. "It's consistent with people right across the province," said O'Reilly.

The Liberal candidate said he and his supporters fought a hard campaign and he sensed the vote would be close. "We worked the riding hard . . . I don't think anyone could have predicted this."

Searching to find some reasoning for this loss, O'Reilly came up empty. "The people of Ontario want an NDP government," he said. "I don't know if this was pro Bob Rae or anti David Peterson."

Asked if he would be willing to represent the Liberals in future elections, O'Reilly sounded doubtful, saying it is far too early to comment.

However, he did promise that the Liberals immediately begin rebuilding. "Our campaign will start tomorrow," he pledged.

An incredible evening

said it is a good feeling to win. "I'm really happy with the results in this riding and in the province."

Drainville said he didn't dare hope he would receive such solid support. On the one hand, he said people seemed to be supportive while he was campaigning. But on the other hand, he doubted this would be possible.

"One part of me felt that I was far ahead, but the other part said 'you're crazy.'" The best his party had previously done in the riding was to earn 20 per cent of the vote, he noted.

Drainville attributes his support to two factors. In the northern part of the riding, he feels he earned the "disaffected vote." People felt very strongly about local issues such as the stymied Haliburton Hospital expansion and the Harcourt sawmill issue.

In the southern part of the riding, Drainville says people were looking at the candidates, assessing their talents and background.

Ironically, the evening started out on a sour note for the NDP. The first return to reach the Legion hall had Jenkins in the lead.

There was little time for disappointment, though. Less than a minute later, more results were phoned in — all showing Drainville in the lead.

By 8:30 p.m. there was little doubt that Drainville was on his way to an impressive victory. And as Drainville's lead built, so did the crowd at the hall. They cheered loudly, laughed and congratulated each other. It was as though they had all won the lottery.

By 9:30 p.m. it was all but over.

O'Reilly and FCP candidate Brad Medd entered the Legion hall to extend their congratulations to the winner.

"I felt he was the best candidate for the job," said Medd, considering the likelihood of his own victory. He said Drainville worked hard to win this election and his workers deserve much credit.

Clearly feeling relieved at the end of a long campaign, O'Reilly joked with the audience. He also congratulated Drainville and offered whatever support he can lend to the new MPP.

Drainville picked up on this offer of support. "I take up that offer because no one can do the job without a lot of support," he said.

Most of Drainville's short speech was a tribute to his workers. "This is an incredible evening," he said. "It's history in the making, here and across Ontario."

In the 1930's there were a few "warriors" who believed in a vision of a co-operative Canada, said Drainville. They were part of a family — a family that has grown over the generations, he said. He said the people who helped him win this election are a part of that family and that vision.

"You and I are going to make those dreams come true," he said.

"We won in Victoria-Haliburton because of hard work. You have won the election," Drainville said to his supporters, "and you deserve all the credit."

This is an historical occasion, he concluded. "Years from now people will look back and say, 'This was the beginning of something great . . . something important.'"

Jenkins proud of team

A second place finish was a victory of sorts for local Conservative candidate Ron Jenkins.

"I'm pleased with our results," Jenkins said after the counting was done for Thursday's provincial election. Although he finished well behind NDP candidate Dennis Drainville, Jenkins edged out Liberal candidate Pat O'Reilly for second place.

"I'm not disappointed," the candidate said. "We ran a hell of a campaign." Looking back, he says he wouldn't have changed a thing.

Jenkins said the unpopularity of the federal wing of his party stood in the way of his chances of winning. "It could have been different if the government in Ottawa had been in a better position," he said.

"As far as our campaign is concerned, I'm pleased," he said. "I'm proud of our team."

Responding to the downfall of the local Liberals and the uprise of the New Democrats, Jenkins said this riding got caught up in a swing.

"People are sick and tired of (Premier David) Peterson and (Prime Minister Brian) Mulroney."

Jenkins received 8,890 votes to Drainville's 15,219 and O'Reilly's 7,604.

Provincially, the NDP won 77 ridings, the Liberals took 36 and the Tories 20.

A bold choice

An impressive voter turnout has resulted in a dramatic electoral turnabout in Victoria-Haliburton.

Voters, long supportive of the man — John Eakins — have overwhelmingly defeated his party in Thursday's election.

Dissatisfaction with the arrogance of the Liberal government has dealt Liberal fortunes in this riding a crushing defeat.

A plurality of more than 6,000 votes catapulted first-time New Democrat Dennis Drainville into the representative position in this riding.

Drainville preached the politics of integrity. Hammering on the fact that the Liberals had made numerous promises in this area, only to renege or hedge on their stated position, the point of honesty was made.

Freed from the deserved bonds of loyalty to Eakins, the voters had a choice. They sent David Peterson an unequivocal message; a new beginning, a new choice, a new chance.

Tired of the scandals and subsequent denials of an unforgiving government, the electorate quickly sided with an untried alternative.

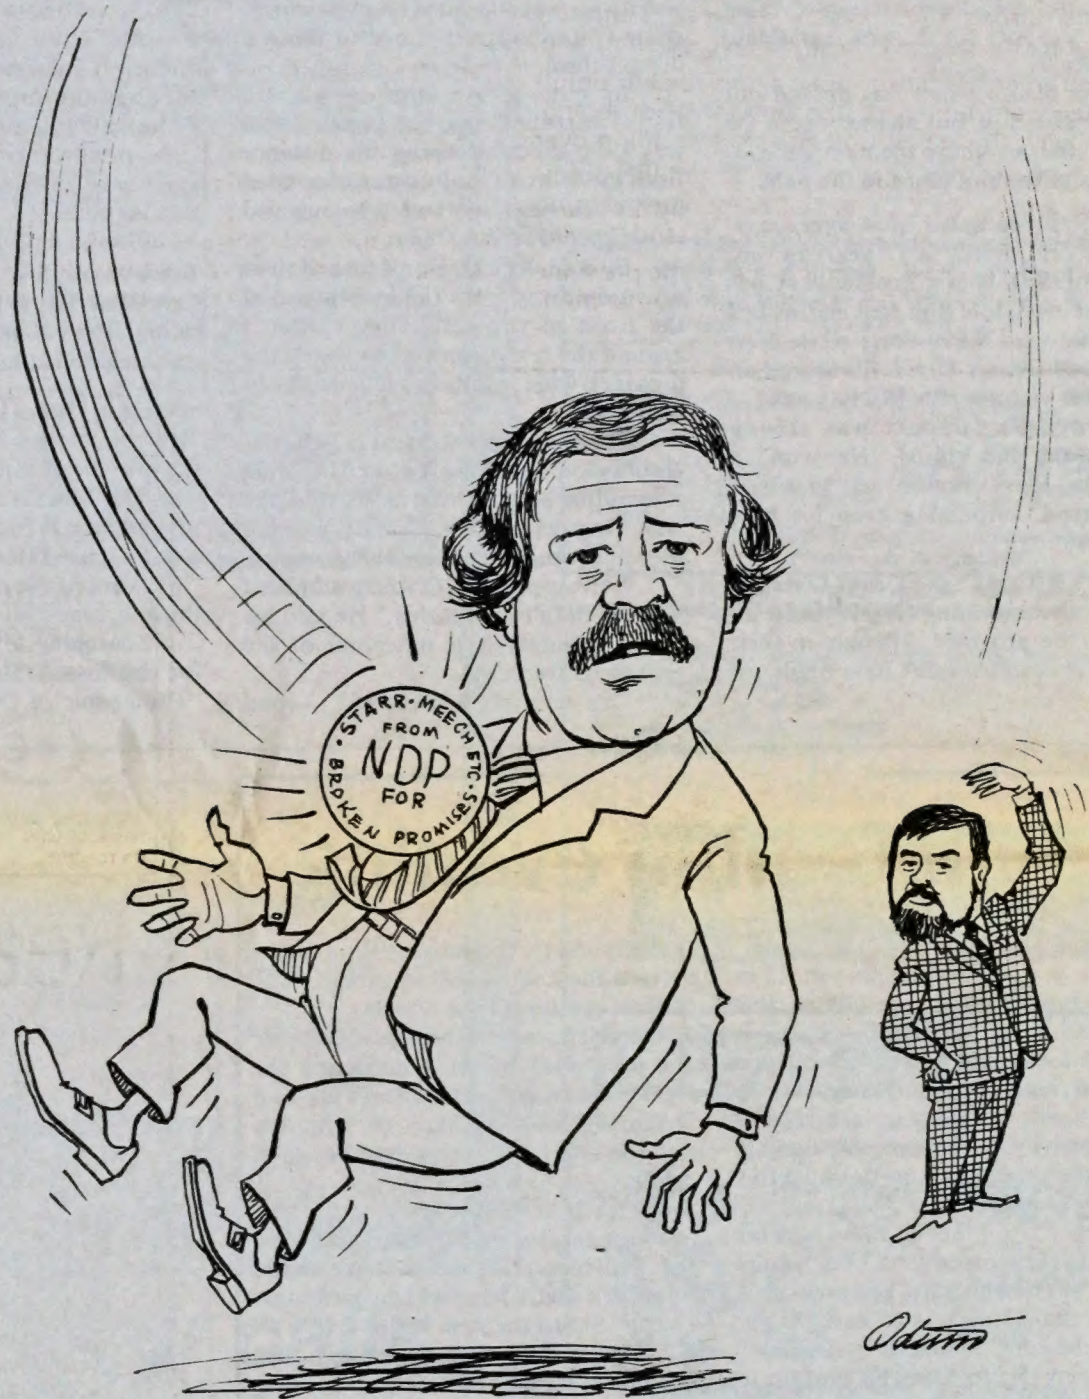

Having rid Ontario of 42 years of Tory rule and investing in five years of Grit dominance, the voters made a bold choice.

But who are these people who will lead Ontario into the mid '90s? Many are tried and true politicians. But a number are ordinary constituents — a deaf candidate in York East, a single mother in St. George-St. David, a radio announcer in Windsor-Sandwich.

Grass-roots people to which a majority of the voters can relate. Humble, common sense people who should return a sense of sanity to provincial politics. A government for the people: a great expectation.

Let us give these visionaries a chance. Let us give them the opportunity to respect our confidence; reflect our hope, institute our desires.

We have given them our support; now they must earn our trust.

"WHERE'D THAT COME FROM?"

Osculation is an interesting pastime. . .

"A young woman and a young man had better not be alone together very much until they are married. This will be found to prevent a good many troubles. Kisses and caresses...have a direct and powerful physiological effect. Nay, they often lead to the most fatal results."

Meech Lake a turning point, not an issue

by Jack Brezina
Publisher

There are a lot of reasons for the unceremonious turfing the Liberals received Thursday night. Ghosts of Patti Starr, Sunday shopping, beer in corner stores, and promises left unfulfilled contributed to the provincial drubbing. Locally, the Haliburton Hospital, waffling over the sewer line extension, more unfulfilled promises and a new Liberal standardbearer with no emotional link to the electorate, cleared the way for the NDP wave sweeping across the province to wash through Victoria-Haliburton unabated.

What about Meech Lake? Most commentators dismiss the impact of that debacle on the outcome of Thursday's vote. They say it's a federal issue. Former MPP John Eakins pointed out during his time as election night commentator on CHEX TV that all the provincial parties endorsed the same position of Meech, providing little room for voters to separate one party from another on this issue.

The commentators should take a closer look. Meech Lake may have not been on the agenda, but memories of it were fresh in everyone's mind. The public recalls the anguish our country was put through by the establishment politicians, including Premier David Peterson. They remember the "roll of the dice" cynicism which surrounded the Meech mess and saw that attitude reflected in the campaign of Ontario's premier. The public, still steaming about being on the outside of the Meech Lake from day one, angry about the way our nation was held for ransom by politicians more interested in their place in the history books than the future of the country, and disenchanted with the mainstream politicians, vented their pent up emotions on Thursday.

Sending the Liberals out to pasture is the first of many strong messages we'll see delivered by the stubby polling-booth pencils. The people of Ontario have, we believe, delivered the first of many resounding warnings. They are fed up with old style politics, as exemplified by the Meech Lake process. They want more honesty and openness in the governments they elect. They want a say in the decisions which affect the fundamental underpinnings of our country and society.

No. Meech Lake was not an issue in the provincial election, but it was a turning point in Canadian political history, the beginning of a new era which politicians will ignore at their peril. We saw the results on Thursday night and there is much more to come.

Reader thanks lodge

The following letter, sent to Hart Lodge, was submitted for publication by the author.

Editor:

This year we had the good fortune to win the door prize at the Mountain Lake Property Owners Association annual meeting: dinner for two at Hart Lodge, generously donated by you.

On Wednesday, August 8, 1990, my wife and I and our two children joined you for dinner. We enjoyed it very much and found your staff kind and attentive. My particular compliments to the hostess who was especially good to us, bringing extra napkins and even a wet washcloth to rib-eating children.

My thanks to you and your staff. We look forward to joining you for dinner again sometime.

David J. McKnight,
Toronto.

...but it's a strange way to say hello

our ages together!

Judy and I did it out of curiosity, I guess. Paul and Sadie did it to get their names in the record book. The Reno Sextet did it strictly for money. They were contestants in an event called the Great American Kiss-Off, a promotion sponsored by a Nevada furniture store which offered $10,000 U.S. to the couple that could kiss the longest. Contestants had to smooch for 12 hours each day, from nine in the morning 'til nine at night, right out there in the furniture store's parking lot. They got a five-minute break each hour to reapply their lipstick and water the flowers—otherwise it was nose to nose with their loved one from dawn to dusk.

How long do you think you could buss your sweetie under those conditions? Half a day? Three days? A week?

The Nevada Nuzzlers held out—and on—for forty-two days. In fact, they'd probably still be nibbling at each other except the furniture company got tired of not having a parking lot. Company officials awarded the ten grand to all six contestants and let them split it up any way they liked.

Strange way to say hello, though—kissing. When I was a kid we used to laugh about the Eskimos and their habit of rubbing noses. But is that any more bizarre than our custom of planting juicy smackers on one another's lips? I wouldn't want to argue it in a court of law.

Which is where some kissers end up, by the way. Like the 24-year-old Oklahoman who was convicted of assault back in 1976 and fined $200. His crime? Kissing the elbow—the elbow!—of a parking warden while she was giving him a ticket.

Things were even tougher in England during the early nineteen hundreds. Any chap caught kissing his wife on a Sunday could expect to spend two hours in the stocks.

All of which brings to mind a morsel of doggerel that's been dancing around in my head ever since I read about the Great American Kiss-Off:

*She frowned and called him Mr.
Because in Sport he kr.
And so in spite
That very nite
This Mr. kr. sr.*

Don't know a thing about the poet, but I'll bet you a French Kiss he wasn't a nineteenth century Englishman.

Toronto trio promises to thrill audiences

by Susan Grober

When the words "up and coming" can no longer be tagged in front of her name, classical pianist Catherine Wilson will breathe a sigh of relief.

"I've been working really, really hard for recognition," says the busy Toronto musician and composer, who has struggled to create a niche for herself in the music world since she began playing at the age of 12.

Wilson has been successful as a solo performer, by appearing on national radio and television, and being commissioned to compose original music for CBC Radio dramas. Also, she was one of only two Canadians to perform at the prestigious Eubie Blake 100th Birthday Celebration in New York.

But it wasn't until she teamed up with a pair of string musicians in 1981 that Wilson found a formula to offer something different.

Featuring violinist Marie Berard and cellist Amanda Forsyth, Catherine Wilson's Trio Vivant promises to thrill local music lovers when the ensemble performs at the Haliburton legion hall on February 24.

This threesome offers a variety of distinct music styles in its program, made up of light classical, baroque, ragtime and popular music.

"It's a unique kind of concept to have those other styles played authentically, especially with this instrumentation," says Wilson.

"Classical musicians are usually pretty square," she adds. "I find I have an affinity for different music styles, but I don't think others could pull it off."

Wilson works hard to blend these types of music. "It's really strategic. We try to make the transitions polished by speaking about the pieces before moving into the different styles."

During a performance, each of the three musicians offers witty tidbits of information about the various eras. "It's not academic at all," says Wilson. "I don't want the program to be long and dull."

On the contrary, the trio has found a loyal audience for its far-from-sombre, toe-tapping performances.

"We get people calling us all the time asking for our basic itinerary," says Wilson. "We always mingle with people after the concerts, and consistently have enthusiastic and almost overwhelmingly warm experiences. By meeting the audience one on one, I've learned we're doing something right."

"It's the positive feedback that keeps us going . . . and we've always been invited back."

In December, the ensemble will perform at the St. Lawrence Centre for the Arts. "That's quite a coup, because it's a major place to perform," says Wilson. "It's sort of a main event."

Still, she enjoys performing in all places. "In smaller towns, we often find the warmest audiences. What we're

*"In smaller towns
we often find the warmest audiences"*

doing seems to appeal to everybody, from little kids right through to senior citizens. We offer really beautiful music that's played well."

Not all fans have discovered the trio through concerts, however. Wilson's one-hour television special in 1986 featured the trio. And a second special, to be taped October 8, will focus solely on the vibrant threesome.

The group's first album, Palm Court Pleasures, won rave reviews when it was released and is still heard today. "It's been out for over three years, and there isn't a day you don't hear it on CBC Radio," Wilson says with pride.

A second album will be recorded this fall, with a third one planned shortly afterward. "Things are really on a roll," she adds with excitement.

As always, the material has been selected by Wilson, who will maintain the trio's mixed-bag formula. She has no inclination to stray from the repertoire.

"Once you have a concept that works, it's stupid to fool around with it," she says. "The choice of repertoire has given us a unique niche. We're doing something not being done by anybody else."

Along with some classical pieces, the trio will record ragtime works by Joseph Lamb and Scott Joplin, the song Memory from the musical Cats, and at least one original composition by Wilson.

The ability to shift so easily from Bach and Schubert to Joplin and Gershwin requires a special gift from each of the trio's members.

Still it wasn't so easy to find the right musicians, and members of Catherine Wilson's Trio Vivant have changed since the group was first formed.

"It's pretty typical to have some personnel changes in a group like this," says Wilson. "There is one main person holding the fort. And you can get three very fine players who don't blend very well."

"I think music has to be soulful, and my group members are the same. Some may use good technique, but offer no emotional satisfaction."

Wilson is enthusiastic about the current lineup.

"My musicians are invaluable for artistic input," she says. "I love working with the strings. We have a good time together.

"We're all very natural musicians, and we reach the sentiments of the audience." Listeners feel good when they listen to the music, she says.

These three women are well-trained, highly experienced musicians. Violinist Berard has performed with many symphonies and was the assistant concertmaster of the National Ballet of Canada Orchestra. Cellist Amanda Forsyth, who started playing at the age of two, is in the Toronto Symphony.

Wilson has degrees in music from Royal Conservatory of Music, the University of Toronto, and a Master's degree from the University of Michigan. "I've got those various degrees, but was working professionally before I even finished school," she notes.

"I don't know what I would be doing if I weren't playing music."

All three have taught music. "But I think performing gives you tremendous rewards and gratitude you don't find anywhere else," says Wilson.

"You know it's what makes you tick, because there's nothing like sharing a love of music (with an audience)."

Even during those early days of struggling, Wilson has relied on her musical talent for survival. "I used to play solo piano six nights a week in Toronto. I was fortunate enough to stop in 1987 because my concert work was plentiful enough."

Until recently, Wilson acted as manager for the trio. Now that things are really moving, she just doesn't have the time. "I think we've been so popular because we have something different to offer," she says.

That "something different" translates into diverse, yet accessible music with a touch of class.

The trio performs in a traditional concert setting with a grand piano and the two string players in front. This season, they will discard their former style of long, delicate gowns for elegant outfits in black and white. "That unifies us," says Wilson. "That ambiance, combined with the playing, makes everybody elated by the time we get to the mingling stage after the show."

This season will take the trio across North America, where performances will include the Scott Joplin Festival in Indianapolis (for their third year), and to an annual festival in Palm Beach, Florida.

Wilson says she looks forward to visiting Haliburton, where she once vacationed years ago in grade school. She certainly hasn't had much free time in recent years for relaxing swims and walks.

But Wilson doesn't begrudge the hard work. And she doesn't foresee much free time in the future.

"It will still be intense, because this type of career is time consuming," she says. "Lots of people don't know us, and I would definitely like the trio to spread further. We're still considered 'up and coming', and it will take a lot of hard work to shake that."

It's a challenge this ambitious performer is more than prepared to meet.

Resource Technician James Munn examines a tree branch for next spring's buds as Clarence Redner looks on. Munn says a 30 foot by 400 foot patch of damaged land on Redner's property is due to 'leaf scorch' but Redner thinks it may be the result of a spray plane dumping leftover herbicide.

Strange path called leaf scorch

by Carol Moffatt

The Ministry of Natural Resources says a swath of oddly damaged trees in Stanhope is suffering from 'leaf scorch', but the man who owns the land isn't so sure.

Clarence Redner was recently out in his sugar-bush cutting wood for the winter. As he left the bush he noticed a peculiar, seemingly dead strip of land. "We happened to look this way and stopped to take a look," he said.

Closer examination revealed brown, curled leaves and blackened ground cover. But there was a definite line where the deadened area began and then where it stopped some 30 feet across. The length of the strip is about 400 feet down a rocky ridge.

"I talked to a few people and the more I did the more I thought maybe a spray plane had some left over and just dumped it," he said. Curious to find out the reason for the change, he called the ministry which sent a technician up to take a look.

Resource Technician James Munn noted the flat, granite rock base of the area which, he said, results in inadequate moisture. "You've got a flat granite face that runs east-west and the tornado went through here, taking down a lot of older trees," he said, referring to the tornado that cut through the area in 1986.

Munn discounted Redner's idea of a herbicide. "If it was a herbicide, everything would be dead," he said, noting that some leaves and the grass were still green.

Munn said large trees which normally shelter seedlings and saplings were taken down by the tornado, leaving the small trees open to harsh sunlight and drying winds. "You've also got the cumulative effect of drought. There was the tornado in '86, then '88 and '89 were severe drought years and the moisture reserve has been depleted," he said, adding that this year was a reasonably good year for moisture.

Munn said the grass is still green because the trees provide shelter for it. He didn't comment on the blackened wildflower stems or other ground cover which, beyond the path, are green and flowering.

"We've had some (leaf scorch) showing in the area. It's like an early frost. It's just one of those things," he said. He went on to point out buds on the damaged trees which indicate the trees aren't dead.

Chuck Jones, a Field Ranger for the Canadian Forestry Services said in a telephone interview there are many reasons why leaf scorch occurs. "It could be age, site related, a south facing exposure, drying winds or taller trees," he said, "You can't just pick one reason without carefully examining the area."

Jones said inadequate moisture is the main reason behind tree scorch. "Some trees are more resistant to stress, some need more moisture than others. We've had three drying summers and things just don't turn around in one summer," he said.

But Redner doesn't believe it's leaf scorch. The damaged foliage consists of top or exposed leaves and ground plants which are out in the open. "Those trees there are sitting on the same granite face and they're green as can be," he said, pointing to the stand of trees five feet away, just beyond the obvious line of damage.

Redner isn't angry, just interested. And skeptical. "If they come out in leaf next year we'll say it was drought," he said.

Waterways Report

A weekly decline of less than 4 per cent brought the Haliburton Reservoir lakes to 64.9 per cent on Monday, August 27. This was still about 10 per cent higher than in 1989 and about 2 per cent higher than the decade of the 1970's.

With one exception on Tuesday, August 28, the weather has continued dry with considerable evaporation losses. The rain seems to have had little lasting effect on the lake levels causing the Kawarthas to pause for only a day or so before resuming their creep downward. No significant draw of reserve water is being made this week, however, and the canal route lakes are likely to come down well into their respective ranges over the Labour Day weekend

Rabies clinics good idea for pet owners

by Carol Moffatt

Southern Ontario has the highest concentration of animal rabies in North America yet only an average of 40 per cent of dogs and 15 per cent of cats are immunized against the killer virus.

Although there currently isn't a problem with rabies in Haliburton County, there has been in the past, said Chief Health Inspector Bob McNaull. "There's always a potential problem," he said and only six cases of rabies have been documented in Haliburton this year.

Animal owners are encouraged to take their pets to upcoming rabies vaccination clinics on September 22 and 29 all across Haliburton.

Rabies is a contagious and fatal disease that affects animals and humans. It is most commonly spread through animal bites but can enter the body through the mouth, nose and eyes. It can also enter the body through a small cut, a rash or even a hangnail.

The virus travels through nerve cells and eventually enters the brain and affects the central nervous system. Paralysis of the limbs occurs, as well as 'lockjaw'—paralysis of the lower jaw. The lockjaw results in flowing saliva, or foaming at the mouth, which is the most commonly recognized symptom of rabies.

Rabid animals are contagious about four or five days before any symptoms appear and remain so until their death. Invariably, death occurs in cats and dogs within 10 days of the appearance of symptoms.

Different animals display varying patterns of behavior

Beware: infected animals can react differently

ior and all animal owners should be aware of any animal that appears unwell to any extent. If rabies is suspected, contact with the animal's saliva is to be avoided at all costs.

Cats tend to be the most vicious when infected. They will hide and spring at passersby, biting and scratching without provocation.

Cattle become restless and aggressive. They appear strained, they bellow hoarsely, suffer muscle spasms and look as though they are choking.

Horses will pace, appear to be restless and in pain and may get up and down a lot. Sometimes rabid horses will bite and sometimes, although rarely, they will demonstrate mania.

Wild animals suddenly appear more friendly when they are infected with rabies. Normally shy animals like skunks and foxes will approach humans easily and without fear. They may attack livestock or family pets.

Dogs tend to become excited for a short period of time before they display the altered temperament and viciousness of advanced rabies. At this stage they may wander aimlessly, and bite animals or people who interfere with them.

However, the animal will deteriorate rapidly, paralysis will set in the limbs and then the lower jaw, and saliva will flow freely. The end result will be coma and death.

The rate of rabies fluctuates, said McNaul, but "it is there in wildlife and we should be concerned about it," he added. Any suspected animal should be reported to the District Health Unit, Agriculture Canada or a local veterinarian.

Animals suspected of being rabid should not be killed unless it is done in self defence, the defence of other people or animals or if the suspected animal may escape.

If a suspected animal must be killed an attempt should be made to avoid damaging its head. The diagnosis of rabies is dependent upon laboratory analysis of brain tissue from the suspect animal.

Anyone bitten or scratched by any animal should take two immediate steps. First, the wound should be thoroughly washed with soap and water and then flushed with water. Second, a doctor should be notified.

Human treatment for rabies usually consists of five injections of anti-rabies vaccine over a month-long period. However, it is important to take the necessary precautionary steps as soon as possible because there is no cure for a confirmed case of rabies. "If a doctor diagnoses rabies in a human he is signing his death certificate," said McNaul.

The upcoming clinics offer vaccinations for a reduced cost. For more information, contact a local veterinarian or the Haliburton Kawartha Pine Ridge District Health Unit.

Horseshoe Lakers vote to fight rezoning

by Carol Moffatt

Property owners on Horseshoe Lake won't take no for an answer.

More than 100 people attended a special meeting last Saturday to hear an overview and update of what the lake association is doing to try to revoke the recent commercial zoning of Blairhampton golf course.

"There is no such thing as a part-time ratepayer and we have the absolute right to protect our own interests," said association president Vern Gilbert. Minden council decided to rezone Blairhampton from Open Space to Tourist Commercial at a special meeting in July and the lake association is concerned about resort development on Horseshoe Lake.

"We also respect everyone's right to develop his or her own property," said Gilbert, but the association is concerned with due process, the interests of the taxpayers and the interests of the township, he added.

The change went against the advice of the township's planner who said mistakes made in the 1986 by-law did not include Blairhampton. Bob Lehman said in a letter to council that zoning Blairhampton Open Space was deliberate, not a mapping error, and if an error in mapping was made, it was with Beaverbrook golf course.

In 1967 both golf courses were zoned commercial but in 1985 Beaverbrook retained its original commercial zoning and Blairhampton was zoned Open Space. "Open Space is a philosophy. It's a temporary zoning and you apply for commercial zoning when you decide on a specific project," said Don Stevens on behalf of the association's Ad Hoc Committee on Rezoning.

The Ad Hoc Committee was established at the association's annual meeting and is intended to gather information for the association's use in an appeal to the OMB.

Although golf courses are allowed in both areas, a Commercial zoning further allows resort development. "Hotels, lodges, motels, boat rentals and marinas are allowed," under C4 zoning, said Stevens. "We could be looking at another PineStone on Horseshoe Lake," he added.

"Most of us just look (at Blairhampton) and see a golf course, but there's 180 acres fronting on the lake," said Stevens. The land stretches 3,000 feet north and 2,600 feet east and west, said Stevens. "There's 250 cottages on Horseshoe Lake and if you took all the cottage lots, that's the size (of the land) we're talking about," he said.

"We're not against the golf course, we're not against Prozak making it 18-holes. We're not against a bigger clubhouse or Prozak himself or any non-intensive development that won't harm the lake or the environment," said Stevens. "What we're worried about is some developer getting his hands on 180 acres on our lake with blanket commercial zoning. That is the crux of the matter," said Stevens, noting that Prozak may not own the land forever.

Stevens questioned Prozak's claim that he didn't know the land was zoned Open Space when he bought it. "I knew it was Open Space. My friends knew it was Open Space. How come the owner, who had the greatest interest, didn't know it was Open Space," he asked.

Executive will prepare to appeal to OMB in spring

"Just because he didn't realize is no reason to now zone it C4," said Stevens, who went on the query why Prozak, his lawyer and the TD bank which holds the mortgage were all told the land was commercially zoned. "For them not to find out that the zoning was pending, they showed incompetence," said Stevens.

Stevens told the crowd how association representatives attended the council meeting and "argued strongly against the proposal." He read two letters to the group, the one from Bob Lehman which stated the zoning of Blairhampton was deliberate, and one sent to council by the association which outlined their appeal to the OMB.

"To be fair, (council) zoned Blairhampton C4 like Beaverbrook, which is one third the size of Blairhampton. It's a sad state of affairs when we have a council that makes important zoning and planning decisions on that basis," said Stevens.

After several questions from members of the audience, Stevens turned the meeting back over to Gilbert. "In the long run this is going to be tremendously important to us. If not for us with the grey hair then to our children," he said.

Gilbert announced that the executive of the association will be making a case to present to the OMB in the spring and a motion was made and passed unanimously to have the executive represent the association at the meeting.

Gilbert told the group the association had been deliberately incorporated so the executive could legally represent the whole association at an OMB hearing. "Otherwise we'd each have to appeal this as individual property owners," he said.

Gilbert went on to say approaching Prozak with a deal is a possibility if the OMB sides with council's decision to let the commercial zoning stay. "Perhaps a formal legal agreement that will be binding on the property deed" would be negotiated which would ensure the land would never be used for a massive resort complex, said Gilbert.

Gilbert said the details of the OMB appeal or any proposed deal with Blairhampton wouldn't be openly discussed for the sake of the association's negotiating power. "I hope you'll trust us," he said.

Gilbert asked that each association member be required to give $25 to a Contingency Fund which will be put toward legal and planning fees, should the hiring of such professionals be necessary. The motion was seconded and unanimously accepted.

"We've put in a lot of time and effort and we feel very deeply about it. Basically, if we don't get the money the whole thing folds up," said Gilbert. One member immediately got up and gave $25 cash to the Treasurer and by the end of the formal meeting, $300 had been collected.

Industrial zoning still proposed in Snowdon

Brad Bradamore is still proposing to rezone a Snowdon Township property for industrial use.

The Minden man had scheduled an open house at the Snowdon municipal office last Friday where he was to outline his proposal to anyone who is interested.

Snowdon Clerk Ernie Hills says the 84.5-acre parcel of land is owned by a numbered company. Bradamore is applying to have it rezoned from rural to industrial and have it severed into 12 lots.

Hills said Friday's meeting was called by Bradamore. He said it is not a public meeting as described by the planning act. He said Bradamore's plans are in the proposal stage.

Council is insisting that everything be done strictly by the book, said Hills. Bradamore's application has been forwarded to the municipal planner, who has suggested a hydrology study should be conducted.

The municipality has not yet received any documentation from Bradamore, said Hills.

Before council would consider the rezoning, Hills said a thorough examination of the property would be required. He said this could include a hydrological study and a topographical study. He said it is also possible that council will want to enter into a development agreement with the property owner, which would spell out what types of uses will be permitted.

The property is located on the south side of County Road 1, west of the Lochlin landfill site.

Meeting addresses aging

The Ontario Advisory Council on Senior Citizens will be holding a two-day consultation meeting to address the topic of growing old in small rural communities.

On September 11 and 12 at Hyland Crest in Minden, representatives from 50 seniors' groups from Haliburton and Hastings Counties, Muskoka, Peterborough and the surrounding areas will attend the sessions.

Tuesday's sessions begin with opening remarks from JoAnne Fillimore and Minden Deputy Reeve Bern Berry. Following this, there will be panel discussions headed by representatives of various seniors' organizations.

Wednesday's agenda will take the participants through a series of presentations to be made by service providers and agencies.

The meetings begin at 9:15 a.m. and continue until 4 p.m.

Watercolor work by Dorothea Rawsthorne and ceramics by Barb Peel are on display at the Agnes Jamieson Gallery.

Paintings and pottery

by Carol Moffatt

The Agnes Jamieson Gallery is awash in wildflowers and soft ceramics.

Until September 22 the art of Dorothea Rawsthorne and Barb Peel are on display and, like most shows that come to Minden, is definitely worth seeing.

Rawsthorne has been a summer resident on Loon Lake for 30 years and has been studying painting for many years. About seven years ago her devotion to oils changed to a deep involvement in watercolors which, combined with her love of painting flowers, has resulted in some wonderful pieces.

Rawsthorne is a firm advocate of painting from life. To that end she can be found in her Haliburton flower garden for most of the summer, staring intently at her flowers, to achieve the most realism she can muster through her brush. She also paints landscapes, focusing on Ontario's northern lakes and rivers.

Her paintings display a subtle shading and blending of colors that is difficult to master in watercolor. Close examination reveals the detailed work that has gone into Rawsthorne's creations, but to gaze at her work from across the room brings the details together into a soft, lifelike image.

The showing of Peel's ceramics with watercolors makes for an interesting combination. Peel is a self-taught artist who has had shows throughout Haliburton over the last five years.

Peel, a native of Haliburton, has won several awards in clay work and has taught pottery for adults and children. Her own work includes stoneware, porcelain, salt fired, raku and crystalline.

Crystalline is Peel's most interesting work. At the start, porcelain pieces are attached to a pedestal, like a candle holder, to prevent the glaze from melting onto the kiln shelf.

Through a four-hour period of raising and dropping the kiln temperature a "magical place where crystals form" occurs, creating a surface which resembles frosty windows in winter.

After the pieces have cooled, Peel must hand chisel the pedestal from the piece. The survival rate of this final process is about 30 per cent.

Peel's pottery is simple, yet it is beautiful in its simplicity. And although it appears delicate, Peel's work is functional. She has a great love for the crystalline work and is hoping to incorporate more of it into her future work.

Flood plain zoning may lead to appeals regulation which directs that generations of pathogenic waste should not be located on a flood plain. Since his business falls within that category, its value is affected even more.

The lawyer representing the Ministry of Revenue introduced evidence which showed that while the municipality had passed the necessary by-law designating the flood plain, the by-law was under appeal to the Ontario Municipal Board and had not received final approval. Despite this situation, the municipality had been using the zoning regulations as if they were law.

At this point, the hearing was recessed while the lawyers for both riders discussed reaching a settlement. After 15 minutes of consultation, the hearing was resumed. Speaking on behalf of the Ministry of Revenue, McLeod said the situation of the Monk property was unique. He said restrictions imposed by the provincial regulations covering the generation of pathogenic waste would have significant impact on the "saleability" of the property and business. He said the province would therefore agree to 15% reductions in the assessment on the business and residential property effectively reducing the property taxes by that amount.

The hearing chairman accepted the agreement and noted the ministry's specific recommendation was because of the type of business operated on the property.

However, in the case which followed, Marg and Pete Worrell were granted a similar 15% reduction on their property taxes.

McLeod, in summarizing the basis for the agreement, noted the Worrell property, located next to the Monk residence, was completely within the flooding (the Monk's property was partially in the "floodway" and "flood fringe"). He pointed out more stringent restrictions applied to housing additions built in the floodway and so the province agreed to the 15% reduction because of the loss of property value.

During the presentation of their testimony, the Worrells told the hearing that they have been actively trying to sell their property for the past two and a half years without success. They said that once potential buyers learned the implications of the flood plain designation the immediately lost interest in the purchase. The home was also examined as a potential location for the CHACE Place Daycare Centre. However, as soon as the government funded agency learned about the flood plain designation, it stopped any interest in the purchase.

"We're trapped here," Mrs. Worrell said after the hearing. "The bed and breakfast we operate here (in 3 bedrooms) is too small, but we are unable to expand the building without two engineers' reports. The house is too big for the two of us, we can't expand, we can't sell... and this is a dry lot," she suggested the only remedy would be for the Ministry of Natural Resources to purchase the property, tear down the house and turn it into the floodway their maps say it is.

Marg Worrell said she was dismayed that only four property owners had bothered to follow through on their assessment appeal. (In addition to herself and Monk, the reductions were granted to Frances Carter, and owner of a riverside home, and Mr. Gilchrist who owns two vacant lots in the flood plain.) Mrs. Worrell noted that while many property owners attended flood plain meetings to voice their concern, only the few bothered to follow through with formal objections. This sentiment was also expressed by Mrs. Carter.

The implication for the property owners along the Gull River could be far-reaching. The Ministry of Revenue has admitted that the flood plain zoning does have a negative impact on property values within that zone. This could lead to a flood of appeals in both Anson, Hindon and Minden and other Highland municipalities where flood plain legislation has been introduced. If this should occur, it is likely the municipalities will be turning to the province for compensation for the loss of revenue.

Highlands deep in our souls

The following poem was written by lifelong Beech Lake cottager Ruth Bergshoeff and presented to longtime friend and fellow Beech Laker Betty Jeffrey on the occasion of Jeffrey's 50th birthday. With summer almost over these words serve to remind residents and cottagers alike of the beauty which draws them to the Highlands and keeps them here.

Haliburton, your highlands are deep in our hearts,
And your beauty each day we long to savour,
Tho' the years roll and tears pour with sorrow and joy,
Still to you we return each year without fail.

Oh, your beauty, how can we full well extol,
For each river and lake we explore has its own charm,
Haliburton, we've loved you since we were young
And the friendships we made are still going strong.

Oh, we love all your sunsets, your bright, starry skies,
And your clouds..and your loons..and your beavers,
We can bask in the radiance of true Northern Lights,
Or just sit..by the fire..singing tunes.

Oh, the mys..tery there..in..the..midnight,
With the strange..light..that nears..then departs...

Haliburton, your highlands are deep in our hearts,
And to you we return each year without fail,
We return, to your lakes, oh yes we return,
In our hearts we love you, oh yes we love you,
In our hearts....in our hearts.....

Reward offered for arrest of vandals

A $500 reward is being offered to anyone with information that leads to the arrest of vandals who damaged a realtor's sign in Moore Falls last Saturday night.

Paul Pilon said a group of "pea-brained hoodlums" cut down a large sign advertising his business last week. He said the vandals used saws to cut through three four-by-four-inch posts to topple the four-by-eight-foot sign.

Pilon said he noticed the damage to the sign Sunday and assumed a car run off Highway 35 and knocked it down. However, when he took a closer look he discovered the saw marks.

Pilon said this must have been "planned destruction" and wonders if it was an act of vengeance. He is hoping someone noticed the vandals in action and is offering the $500 reward.

OPP Constable Brian Sachs is investigating this occurrence.

Hi Kids!

Here is another puzzle for you with a word list. Look in the diagram of letters for the words given in the list. Find them by reading up, down, forward, backward and diagonally. They are all in a straight line and do not skip letters. Circle the words in the diagram and cross it off the list.

It's as easy as that. Have fun!

Announcing a welcome change on the Haliburton landscape.

KEANEY PLYMOUTH CHRYSLER

Highway #35 & Main Street, Minden 286-1561

Chrysler Canada is proud to announce the Grand Opening of Keaney Plymouth Chrysler.

Michael P. Keaney, President, invites you to drop by and meet his experienced team of sales and service professionals.

At Keaney Plymouth

Chrysler, expect the same high standard of product quality and dealer service that earned Chrysler the highest customer satisfaction rating of any North American car company.*

At Keaney Plymouth Chrysler, you'll also see how we're changing the automotive landscape. New aerodynamic shapes. Leading-edge technology in turbo engines. Trucks that handle like cars. Minivans that have revolutionized family travel. And the longest powertrain warranties in the industry. So come in and see the exciting '90 cars and trucks. And be sure to check out Keaney's everyday specials.

Just look for the Chrysler sign.

CHRYSLER CANADA
Changing the landscape

*1988 J.D. Powers and Associates

We've been here a year now and would like to thank all those who have supported us over the past year. In celebration of our 1st Anniversary we are offering a few specials throughout the month of September.

CONTEST RULES:

- Contest is open to all residents of Canada (excluding Quebec) except proprietors and employees of participating GUARDIAN® Drugstores, Drug Trading Company Ltd., Tambrands, their respective advertising and promotional agencies, the judging organization and those with whom they are domiciled. Limit one entry per household. No purchase necessary to enter contest.
- Random draw will be held in-store on Saturday, September 15, 1990 at close of business from all entry forms received at all participating GUARDIAN® Drugstores.
- The chances of being selected depend upon the total number of entries received from customers of all participating stores.
- Selected entrant, in order to win prize, must first successfully answer the skill testing question on the entry form.
- By entering the contest, the winner agrees to the use of their name, address and photograph for publicity purposes without compensation. If the winner is under the age of majority, his or her parent or guardian must accept the prize on his or her behalf and sign a standard release form.
- No substitution will be made, save for the sponsor's right to make a prior substitution of equivalent kind and value in the event of unavailability of a prize.
- Prize: (1) One Sony Walkman SRF-29 will be awarded in every participating GUARDIAN® Drugstore. Approximate retail value of each Sony Walkman is $32.95.

Guarding Your Health

Be Good To Your Teeth

WHAT YOU NEED TO KNOW:

Oral health care involves more than daily cleaning. Whether you have your natural teeth or wear dentures, you need to check your mouth monthly for any changes.

Many mouth problems aren't painful. This means that they can become serious before they are detected. By taking a few minutes to look for any trouble spots, you can catch them early and get treatment if necessary.

TO EXAMINE YOURSELF:

- Stand or sit in front of a mirror.
- Pull each lip back and carefully check your gums.
- Check your tongue and the insides of your cheeks.
- Using your finger, feel all around your mouth.

HERE ARE THE SYMPTOMS TO WATCH FOR:

1. Sores in your mouth or on your tongue.
2. A white patch that won't rub off when you scrape it with a fingernail or one that leaves a bleeding area when you do.
3. A lump or bump, especially on one side only of your mouth.
4. Swollen, red or bleeding gums.
5. A persistent ulcer on your lip.

If you notice any of these signs, see your dentist right away. When problems are detected early, treatment can be far more effective.

Small town fits exchange student perfectly

"It reminds me of a cowboy movie," she says

by Carol Moffatt

It has only been three weeks, but so far Anette Busk-Rasmussen is enjoying Minden. "It's beautiful," said the 16-year-old Danish Rotary exchange student. "We have lakes and rivers but this is so different," she said.

Busk-Rasmussen is part of the continuing student exchange program sponsored by the Minden Rotary Club. She hails from Odense, the third largest city in Denmark, a city which has a population of about 175,000.

Three weeks isn't a long time to be away from home and although Busk-Rasmussen isn't homesick. "I miss the little things, like talking to my mother and waking up and sitting with my father," she said.

Although Canada is the farthest place she has travelled alone, Busk-Rasmussen has travelled throughout Europe with her family. "I've been to Sweden, Norway, Hungary, Austria, Italy, Switzerland, Germany and Spain," she said, and when it came time to choose her exchange country, "Canada was my first choice," she said, "and I was hoping for Ontario," she added.

Although she lives in a large city, Busk-Rasmussen wanted to live in a smaller town on her exchange. "I hate big cities," she said. "I like this town because it is so small it reminds me of a cowboy movie," she said, "but instead of saloons they have Rockcliffes," she added with a laugh.

Busk-Rasmussen said she's heard all about the famous Rockcliffe Hotel. "I'm going to come back when I'm 19," she said, laughing.

Busk-Rasmussen applied for the exchange program for different reasons. "I wanted to grow up, to get away and to try to live without my family," she said. The biggest reason, however, was to travel. "I want to see some more of the world," she said.

Next June she will have to make a choice between staying in town to graduate from high school or going on a Rotary sponsored trip across Canada and into the western United States. "I'd like to be at the graduation, but I really want to go west..." she said with obvious hesitation.

It's a bit early yet to make any firm comparisons between Canada and Denmark, but there are a few noticeable ones, said Busk-Rasmussen. "The houses are wood here. Ours are mostly brick," she said, adding she realizes larger cities consist of predominantly brick homes.

"I think the cars are the same but there are less trucks, the ones you can ride in the back of but it's illegal," she said, referring to pick-up trucks.

She said the many of the boys at Haliburton high school have long hair, a trend which she says is "out" in Denmark. "There are all sorts of types of people (here) and everyone's nice," she said.

"I've noticed you have so many bathrooms here. We usually only have one in a house. And phones. We only have two or three, not five or six in a house," she said.

Television isn't something Busk-Rasmussen watches a lot of and what she has seen of North American television she calls "pretty crazy." "We get some of the soaps, like Neighbours, and we get Cheers but it's so slow that Shelly Long is still in it," she said.

Busk-Rasmussen, like all exchange students, will lose a year of school, but she attends Haliburton high school daily anyway. School has just begun but already "it's so different," she said.

In Denmark, school timetables run on a Monday to Friday schedule. Here, "it goes Day 1, Day 2, Day 3, Day 4," she said, which means Friday would be Day 1 again on a week that begins with Day 1 on a Monday.

She is taking two English courses, "because I want to speak English really good when I go home," she said, even though her English is virtually fluent now.

One Canadian history course is teaching her about this country's past and another discusses the ever-changing world, law and politics.

"I'm also taking a geography and we had a test today but I didn't do so good," she said. "It was on the Minden and Haliburton area and I don't know yet, so I got to look at an atlas," she said.

Busk-Rasmussen will stay with four families while in Minden. "My third host dad is my English teacher. I don't know what to call him," she said. Homework was assigned in school already, on the second day. "That was my 'dad'," she said with a smile.

Busk-Rasmussen's own father is a Rotarian and the family has hosted exchange students for many years. It's partially through English-speaking students that Busk-Rasmussen improved her English language skills.

"One girl didn't know much Danish so we spoke English with her. Another girl knew quite a lot of Danish and my grandmother, who lived in England for six years, spoke to her in English and she would answer in Danish," she said.

But English is mandatory in Danish schools, where the language lessons begin in grade five. In grade seven German lessons begin and everyone becomes trilingual. "I really want to improve my English," she reiterated, adding she was never very good with German grammar.

"I want to learn about different customs, like Christmas. I want to learn about the country and meet new people," she said with a smile and a nod of her head.

Ducky race a splashing success

by Carol Moffatt

It was 'all hands on duck' for the first annual Ducky Race sponsored by the Minden and District Lioness Club Saturday. The $1,300 profit will be evenly divided between the Lions and the Lioness.

Four hundred eighty one plastic ducks were sold and then sent spinning and splashing down the Gull River to raise money for community donations. "It was terrific. It turned out much better than we'd expected," said Lioness President Janet Readman.

Readman said the race had a few snags such as eddies, currents and wind, but the whole process was a learning experience "to work out for next year."

Kids and adults alike eagerly lent a helping hand when the ducks got stuck, said Readman. "The community was really involved. It was something to see," she added, explaining that hockey sticks were used to splash water at stranded ducks to dislodge them.

The race began at the Beaverbrook golf course bridge when all 481 ducks were released from a tarpaulin at the same time. They bobbed and weaved their way to the finish line in front of the post office where the winners were declared.

The first place duck belonged to Minden's Pat Clark who received $300 in prize money. Second was 3-year-old Matthew Moore who won $200 and third place went to Randy Potts of Bracebridge who received $100.

Readman said the Lioness don't have any current plans for the money. "We'll set (the profit) aside and put it in the bank, then we have our money to play with during the year," she said. "We'll donate it back into the community in some way," she added.

Rub a dub duck. ... Leon Wright and York Marion make a valiant effort to help 481 stranded ducks in the first annual Ducky Race. Eddies, currents and the wind played havoc with the ducks which had to be gathered up and re-released further down the river.

Mankind must reconnect with natural, sustaining world

Reflections

by David Suzuki

Guns, the tragic death of a policeman, and the blockade of roads and bridges have raised the heat in the issue of native land claims in Canada. Elijah Harper, Oka and the Canada-wide protests by people of the First Nations have forced us to confront the frustration and anger of native people and the anti-native racism that lies just below the surface of society.

Lytton Indian Band Chief, Ruby Dunstan, often points out that her constituents are "invisible people". We tend to notice only those natives who reinforce widely held stereotypes, but for the most part, they simply don't register on our consciousness.

The effects of prejudice and indifference are reflected in the terrible statistics - epidemic levels of poverty, violent deaths, suicide, alcoholism, sexual abuse and imprisonment. With such a bleak outlook for the average aboriginal person, it is surprising confrontations such as Oka have been so rare.

When Columbus reached North America five centuries ago, the continent was fully occupied by dozens of complex, vibrant nations. But armed with a belief in their superiority over "subhuman" aboriginal peoples, European invaders took the land by force.

To paraphrase former California Senator S.I. Hayakawa, many Canadians ask why we should negotiate over land rights now when it was stolen fair and square. But the unjust takeover of aboriginal land is not merely an unfortunate fact from the past. Successive Canadian governments have continued to abrogate the already unfair agreements forced on native people by repeatedly moving tribes, reducing the boundaries of their reserves, developing their land without approval and unilaterally changing the conditions for government support, right up to the present.

And where we have conducted an appearance of negotiations, with for example, the Ingenika in B.C., the Lubicon in Alberta, the Teme Augama Anishnabe in Ontario and the Cree in Quebec, the cards have been heavily stacked against the native people as they have often been forced to negotiate with development or encroachment either imminent or already under way.

Land claims negotiations proceed with glacial speed and the federal policy of dealing with only six at a time forces dozens of claimants to line up.

Yet all the while, land the natives claim is theirs is being bought and sold, logged, dammed, developed and otherwise altered irrevocably.

In June, former Mt. Currie Band Chief Leonard

Andrew told me with obvious pain that roadbuilders in an area his people consider to be both theirs and sacred had exposed bones in a burial site. But the desecration continued.

We must address native land claims as a whole - because so long as we fail to do so, we perpetuate the barbarism begun with the occupation of the continent. Our international stature on human rights is severely diminished by the reality of how we treat people of the First Nations here.

Besides focusing attention on this human rights issue, the Oka confrontation offers an insight into the crisis in the global environment.

Our species is on an unprecedented destructive rampage that threatens much of the fabric of life on earth, ourselves included. We are impelled by a belief in the human capacity to manage the planet and faith in an economic system that demands maximization of the conversion of nature into cash. But the life support structures of the earth can't be sustained under our assault.

When our attitudes and practices are viewed in contrast to a radically different outlook and set of priorities, perhaps we can see what is wrong.

The Mohawks of Oka are telling us that land is more than just a commodity to be exploited in the service of profit.

The so-called founding cultures of Europe arrived on this continent without any connection to the land and tried to recreate the society and environment from which they came. Without historical, cultural and ecological roots to the land, there was nothing to temper the impulse to take whatever they wanted. So the past five centuries have been a continuing saga of conquest, exploitation and exhaustion. We log, mine, dam, farm, build until we exhaust resources or opportunity and then move on.

In spite of centuries of oppression and cultural genocide, many native people retain an understanding that the land - rivers, lakes, forests, wildlife - embodies their history, culture and reason for existence and that if the land goes, they cease to exist as people who are different and special.

Of course, they can survive physically, as indigenous people do all over the world in shanty towns and slums, as poor copies of the dominant society with only memories of what they once were. The small forest in Oka is a tiny reminder of a spiritual connection that makes the people there what they are.

For those who are concerned about future generations and the state of the world we leave for them, the remnants of that aboriginal perception of the sanctity of land inform us that we have to find a way to reconnect with the natural world that sustains all of us. For non-native people, that's what makes the issue of native land claims so relevant and important.

Fun and fitness, singing and bingo

Senior League

by Winnifred Barnum

Wednesday evening Pastor Murray held a service in the main lounge for which the residents thank him and his helpers very much.

Thursday morning fun and fitness was held in the main lounge since the auditorium was needed for other meetings. In the afternoon Club 35 above Carnarvon brought and served the tea party. Since the auditorium was still in use the birthday party was held in the dining room. This was a birthday tea provided by Ellen, Marion Irwin, Thelda Weston, Olive Daniels, Madeline Redfern and it was delicious. They had a beautiful birthday cake. It had one large candle instead of small candles and everyone who had a birthday blew out the candle. Those having birthdays were Violet Thornt, Vera Archer, Irene McKelvey, Nora Groves and Doris Robertson.

After the tea we all adjourned to the Main lounge for a sing song. Marion Irwin played the piano and Grace Coburn led the singing. We certainly thank everyone for a pleasant afternoon.

Doris Robertson read to some of the residents in the small lounge from "Morning Star".

Terry and Clara Austin came for me. When Norma finished work we went out for dinner as it was Clara's birthday.

Thursday evening Tom McAllister called bingo. It was played in the dining-room because the auditorium was still in use. Thank you Tom, I am sorry I missed thanking you in my column last week so this is a double thank you. I also thank Pearl Lyle for her gift to our prize money.

There was no entertainment during the holiday weekend. Some of the residents were out and some had visitors to see them.

Sunday night Chapel service was conducted by Reverend John Burgess. Our organist, Alice Jones was unable to come, so we did our best without the organ. Thank you Reverend Burgess for a very enlightening service.

Ruby Lewis had her daughter Mildred and her husband home from Newfoundland for three weeks. She visited Ruby several times which made her happy.

There are two ladies connected with Hyland Crest who are on the sick list. We are sorry to hear one is the daughter of Mary Oliver, Rose Coneybeare and a nurse whom we miss very much, Hazel Beattie. We wish them a speedy recovery.

Dana Lee has been on Activities in Linda's place and Doris is on vacation

Literacy programs to receive funding

The Ontario government will allocate over $9.1 million during International Literacy Year to fund 183 organizations that provide literacy programs and services for adults throughout the province, Education Minister Sean Conway announced today.

The $9.1 million includes an allocation of $8.2 million to literacy organizations in four Ontario regions, and $9 million to fund provincial organizations that provide special support services to literacy groups and practitioners.

The funding is part of a total Ministry of Education commitment of $63 million to be spent on adult literacy training in 1990/91 throughout the province.

"Literacy is an important means to achieving personal development and economic growth," said Conway. "In order to remain competitive in this increasingly global economy, we must ensure that all Ontarians have access to superior literacy and basic skills training."

The 1983 organizations receiving funding are involved in community-based literacy training and in the development of pilot projects as part of International Literacy Year.

Community groups and umbrella organizations that offer individual and group literacy training to adults, and services such as telephone hotlines, computer-based instruction, and drop in centres will receive funding through the Ontario Community Literacy program.

A special fund for International Literacy Year will assist various start-up projects to undertake needs assessments and pilot community literacy programs. The fund will also be used to develop materials, provide professional training, increase public awareness about literacy and continue the implementation of a computerized provincial network for literacy programs in Ontario.

Waste management study underway with first meeting

The County of Haliburton has started a two-year Waste Management Master Plan Study with its first Steering Committee meeting on August 7, 1990.

The study will assess and reorganize the current municipal waste management system into a system that is technically and economically appropriate and has a minimum impact on the natural, social and cultural environments.

The proposed system will attempt to achieve 25 per cent diversion of wastes from landfill sites by 1993 and 50 per cent diversion by the year 2000. The diversion will be accomplished by the recycling, reduction and reuse of the current waste stream and will thereby reduce the size of required landfill site(s) for the waste management system.

The existing 22 municipal and eight private landfill and dump sites will be assessed for their environmental impact and, in the final analysis, potential regionalized landfill sites will be identified and preferred sites selected based on a methodology and criteria established by the public, the Steering Committee and the Consultant.

The study will be following terms of reference that have been established by the County Planning Committee in conjunction with the Ministry of Environment Branch and Environmental Assessment Branch.

During the two-year study, the general public will have a role in the development of the Waste Management Master Plan. Initially the public will be asked to assist in the development of methods and evaluation criteria that will allow for the identification and selection of a preferred waste management system, including the landfill site(s).

Landfill sites are a major component of any waste management system and the early stages of the study will clarify that the only system that would not require a landfill site is one that exports all waste outside of the County. Emphasis will also be placed on the fact that the size of a

Fall colour info

Travellers are now able to call the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation for twice-weekly reports on Ontario's Fall colour progression, the best viewing locations and tour possibilities.

"Fall is a beautiful time of year to travel throughout Ontario and enjoy the rich hues of the changing leaves," Ontario Minister of Tourism and Recreation Ken Black said.

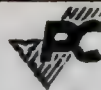

"My Ministry is pleased to provide information to travellers who want to take advantage of Ontario's many attractions and natural beauty."

The public may dial toll-free 1-800-ONTARIO (English) and 1-800-268-3736 (French). A taped report, available 24 hours a day, can be heard by dialing (416) 963-2992.

MOE and A.J. Robinson & Associates will be present to obtain general comments and suggestions from the public concerning the study process, the general concerns regarding waste management and, in particular, the development of waste management system evaluation criteria and landfill selection criteria.

More details on the study process can be obtained from the Waste Management Co-ordinator at Haliburton County office in Minden (Phone 286-1333) or from Jennifer Voss, P. Eng. at A.J. Robinson & Associates Inc. in Kanata (Phone 613-592-6060). The study is currently seeking a maximum of two individuals from each Township for representation on the Public Liaison Committee. Interested persons should contact the county office for further information.

Dear P.C. Friends:

Thank you very much for your hard work on the campaign.

Many hours of hard work go into an election campaign. I would like to thank you for your personal support of my candidacy.

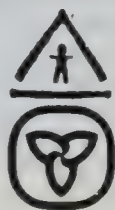

Our system of government allows us to work on election campaigns to elect the candidate of your choice. It was an honour and a privilege to be the P.C. candidate in our riding.

I hope we will keep in touch even though the campaign is over.

Please feel free to contact me at anytime if I can be of any help.

Sincerest best wishes,
Ron Jenkins.
